Skills & Experience Summary

Phoebe completed a degree in Psychology at the University of Liverpool before becoming a Therapy Assistant at the Royal Free Hospital in London working across orthopaedic, neurology, gastro and hepatology wards. This ignited Phoebe's passion for neurology, and she went on to study a Masters in Speech and Language Sciences at University College London (UCL).

Once qualified as a Speech and Language Therapist, Phoebe gained extensive experience working in multi-disciplinary teams across acute, inpatient rehabilitation, outpatient, vocational rehabilitation and community settings. Caseloads have included poly-trauma, traumatic brain injury, stroke and progressive neurological conditions.

In her role as a therapist Phoebe gained extensive experience of complex case management and worked within interdisciplinary teams to achieve the best possible outcomes for clients. She has extensive experience of completing comprehensive assessments, designing and implementing rehabilitation programmes, report writing and managing other professionals. In addition to this she has enjoyed the training and development of staff, students and family members.

Phoebe is passionate about achieving the best possible outcomes for clients and their families and understands the importance of setting realistic and achievable goals with an interdisciplinary approach.
